

John Prasch Health and Physical Fitness Award

Presented in his memory by
Edward and Mary Copple

Purpose of the Award

The John Prasch Health and Physical Fitness Award is an award to recognize an educator each year who has made a significant contribution to students' lives by promoting health and physical fitness. Mr. Prasch, a former superintendent of the Lincoln Public Schools, believed very strongly not only in educating students academically, but also in teaching them to appreciate and practice good living habits that promote good health for a lifetime. This award, which includes a $1,000 stipend, was created by Edward and Mary Copple to honor John Prasch and his dedication to the youth in our community.

Who is Eligible

Any certified or licensed Lincoln Public Schools educator is eligible to receive the award. The Prasch Award may be received more than once during tenure with LPS.

Criteria for the Prasch Award

Selection of the recipient for the award will be based on a significant contribution to students' lives by promoting health and physical fitness either in his or her school, the entire school system or the community at large.

Nominating Process

Nominations can be submitted by any individual or group. When a nomination form is received at the Foundation for Lincoln Public Schools, the second part of a two-step process will begin. Nominees will then receive application forms to complete. Return of the application will assure that the educator is actually interested in being considered and feels qualified for the award.
